

I hope that you do not bow to the pressure of telemarketers in loosening the Phone Privacy laws of Indiana. I finally have a chance to eat my meals and spend time with my family without the interruptions of telemarketers. This is because the lawmakers of Indiana took a bold stand against these annoying phone calls and those who perpetrated them.

If I want to buy something, I most likely will not buy it from a company that calls me trying to sell a "service". I couldn't begin to tell you how many phone calls I received on home improvements or mortgage loan programs. And I don't even own my home. I rent. If I want to buy something, I will go to the seller and I will make a choice as to what service and from whom I will purchase it.

As I stated, I used to be annoyed constantly by service providers of all sorts. It got so bad at times that I didn't even answer my telephone. Now that Indiana lawmakers have taken control of the situation for us, I receive no annoying telemarketing phone calls. KEEP IT THAT WAY Please. Don't water our laws down.
